

149 words

Over the years, God rewrote Carrie's dreams from being a corporate accountant to being a stay-at-home mom and a writer. With a background writing online weekly devotions, a mentor at the Christian Writer's Guild encouraged her to try fiction. The writing monster she now barely keeps contained was born.

After almost ten years in the US Air Force, Carrie's husband medically retired, and they settled in North Carolina. With their three children all figuring out what they want to do in life after high school, Carrie stays busy loving on women, keeping up with her family and friends, and entering story worlds via books and movies as much as she can.

More than anything, Carrie strives to write clean fiction and encouraging non-fiction that demonstrate practical Christianity. She says, "I want my readers to find the courage to believe more is possible, and that's what compels me to write."

50 words

God rewrote Carrie's dreams to include being an author. With a background in weekly devotions, a mentor encouraged her to try fiction. The writing monster that she now barely keeps contained was born. Since then, she's completed several inspirational fiction books and encouraging nonfiction for military spouses and new believers.

35 words

With a background in writing weekly devotions, a mentor encouraged Carrie to try fiction. The writing monster that she now barely keeps contained was born. Since then, she's completed several inspirational fiction and nonfiction books.